
The diagram illustrates a two-stage sampling process. At the top, a large rectangle represents the population of size N . A smaller rectangle inside it represents the sample of size n . Inside the sample rectangle, an even smaller rectangle represents the subsample of size m . Arrows indicate the flow from the population to the sample, and from the sample to the subsample. The labels N , n , and m are placed next to their respective rectangles.

